Since the signing of the Convention on the Legal Status of the Caspian Sea during the Fifth Summit of the Caspian Littoral States held in Aktau on August 12, 2018, a number of important steps and measures have been taken to further develop cooperation in the Caspian Sea. Kazakhstan, Azerbaijan, Turkmenistan, and Iran have yet completed the ratification process. President of Turkmenistan Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedov suggested holding the next Caspian summit and the First Caspian Economic Forum in Turkmenistan in 2019. However, the proposal to organize the Caspian summit was not adopted, while the forum is scheduled to be held on August 12, 2019 in Turkmenistan, and preparations are already underway.

The Turkmen parliament ratified the Convention on the Legal Status of the Caspian Sea on December 1, 2018, and the presidents of Kazakhstan and Azerbaijan ratified the document on February 8 and 22, 2019 respectively. The implementation of the convention now depends on when Russia and Iran will complete their internal ratification process. It should be noted that in September last year Ambassador-at-Large of the Russian Foreign Ministry Igor Bratichkov expressed hope that no state would deliberately extend the ratification process. According to Bratichkov, the early entry into force of the convention was in the interest of all the parties, given that the convention took into account national interests of all the Caspian littoral states. Based on this statement, it seemed that Russia would soon implement the ratification process. However, Moscow has not yet taken any concrete steps towards the ratification.

Iran, on the other hand, continues the internal discussion process on this issue. In fact, Iranian authorities evaluated the Convention on the Legal Status of the Caspian Sea in different ways. Conservatives and religious figures criticized Iran’s President Hassan Rouhani, who signed the convention, and Foreign Minister Mohammad Zarif, who was involved in the negotiations, for ignoring the country’s interests. According to them, Iran should have a greater share of the Caspian Sea and agreed on a number of its provisions. During the second meeting of the working group held on April 16-17, 2019 in Nur-Sultan, the parties continued discussing the issues raised in Baku. As it is known, the next meeting of the high-level working group will be held in July 2019 in Iran.

Apart from these meetings, other events dedicated to the development of cooperation between the Caspian littoral states were held this year. In particular, on February 26, the fourth meeting of authorized representatives of the Caspian littoral states was held in Ashkhabad to discuss the draft protocol on cooperation in combating illegal extraction of biological resources (poaching) in the Caspian Sea. The parties discussed in detail the draft protocol in accordance with the Convention on the Legal Status of the Caspian Sea, and made necessary corrections and recommendations. On March 14, Ashgabat hosted the first meeting of authorized representatives of the Caspian littoral states to discuss the draft agreement between the governments of the Caspian states on cooperation in the field of scientific research on the Caspian Sea. It is expected that the agreement will strengthen the legal framework for cooperation in conducting various scientific work in the Caspian Sea, as well as monitoring and preventing natural and man-made emergency situations.

In addition, the first meeting of the ministry of defense of the Caspian littoral states was held on April 24 in Astrakhan to discuss the ways of strengthening security in the region and the status of the Agreement on the Prevention of Incidents in the Caspian Sea. During the meeting, Admiral Sergei Pinchuk, the commander of the Russian Caspian Flotilla, emphasized the importance of the agreement in ensuring the security of sea and air traffic in the region. The parties also expressed their readiness to discuss the draft agreement on confidence-building measures in the Caspian Sea in the future. It is worth noting that on May 14, 2019, President of Kazakhstan Kassym-Jomart Tokayev signed the Law of the Republic of Kazakhstan “On the ratification of the Agreement on the Prevention of Incidents in the Caspian Sea”. Similar to the previous convention, in addition to Kazakhstan, this document has been ratified by Turkmenistan and Azerbaijan, while Russia and Iran have not yet completed their internal ratification procedures.

Nevertheless, the Caspian littoral states are interested in developing economic cooperation. The First Caspian Economic Forum to discuss these issues will be held on August 12, 2019 in Turkmenistan. The forum will consist of an international conference, the Caspian exhibition of innovative technologies, and the ceremony of signing contracts between the companies and entrepreneurs. The international conference will focus on the following issues: implementation of joint investment projects and programs; exchange of experience in the creation and development of free economic zones; exchange of experience in legislation, standards, rules and statistical information in the field of economy; cooperation in digital economy; development of economic cooperation between the littoral states; establishment of joint ventures. First of all, representatives of the Caspian littoral states will discuss how to create conditions for major projects in the oil and gas industry, electricity, transport, trade, agriculture, tourism and other areas, and identify ways to make the region attractive for foreign investments.

To conclude, new economic projects are expected to be launched in the Caspian region after the signing of the Convention on the Legal Status of the Caspian Sea. Indeed, the littoral states have expanded their cooperation in digital economy; development of economic cooperation between the littoral states; establishment of joint ventures. First of all, representatives of the Caspian littoral states will discuss how to create conditions for major projects in the oil and gas industry, electricity, transport, trade, agriculture, tourism and other areas, and identify ways to make the region attractive for foreign investments.
